(A) If you are a “coffee beginner” having no idea what to order at a coffee shop, you might need a guide on the differences of various types of coffee. Luckily, the following introduction to different types of coffee may help you understand them more! First of all, espresso, made by boiling hot water under extremely high pressure through ground coffee beans, is served as the foundation of most coffee drinks. Dark, strong and concentrated, espresso can be added to hot water, and then becomes the well-known Americano. Besides plain hot water, milk or syrups are common ingredients added to espresso, and many different choices of coffee drinks are created accordingly.

The most popular choice of coffee with milk in a café is caffè latte, meaning “coffee and milk” in Italian. A caffè latte is composed of an espresso and steamed milk with a thin layer of foam. You can also add vanilla syrup, pumpkin spice or cinnamon powder to make the drink more flavorful. On the other hand, though similar to caffè latte, cappuccino is made with less steamed milk but more foam on top of it. If you are fond of the texture of foam, you should definitely give cappuccino a shot! Last but not least, if you have a sweet tooth, mocha, a combination of cappuccino and hot chocolate, is absolutely a great choice for those who do not like the bitter taste of coffee.
