Have you ever done something just because everyone else was doing it? If so, you’ve likely experienced the bandwagon effect—a situation where people adopt a certain ___30___ simply because many others have already done so. The more people follow a trend, the more ___31___ it becomes, encouraging even more individuals to join in. The story behind this term dates back to 19th-century American ___32___. In 1848, presidential candidate Zachary Taylor used a bandwagon—a wagon carrying musicians—to attract attention to his campaign. His growing popularity led others to ___33___ him, and over time, the phrase “jump on the bandwagon” came to describe people adopting ideas or trends just because they seem popular.

The bandwagon effect influences many aspects of daily life. For example, we often ___34___ a restaurant by the length of the line outside, assume a product is of high quality just because it is a(n) ___35___ item, or adopt a widely accepted belief without much thought. While following the crowd may seem harmless, it can sometimes lead to negative consequences. One ___36___ example is when students start bullying a classmate, and others join in simply to fit in. In spite of its drawbacks, the bandwagon effect isn’t always negative. When those around us think and ___37___ positively, we might be encouraged to do the same. Ultimately, what matters most is making informed and independent decisions rather than blindly following the majority.

(A)

At one time, it was one of the most feared diseases in the world. From the 14th to the 17th century, it swept across the planet, killing an estimated 25 million people in Europe alone. This disease—bubonic plague—was so frightening that it became known as the “Black Death.” Fortunately, advances in medical treatment have made the disease disappear. Just recently, however, bubonic plague has once again reared its ugly head, with cases of the disease reported in China.

How does bubonic plague spread? We now understand that fleas play a key role in transmitting the disease. If a flea bites an animal infected with the plague and then bites a human, it passes the disease on to that person. In some cases, infected animals or people can also directly pass on bubonic plague to other people.

A person with bubonic plague will usually start to show symptoms a few days after becoming infected. The symptoms include feelings of sickness, weakness, and often a fever or headache. More notably, people who have bubonic plague also commonly develop swollen painful lumps, called “buboes,” under their arms and sometimes in the necks.

Historians say that the Black Death pandemic that started in the 14th century was one of the most devastating events in human history. It is estimated that about 30 to 60 percent of the population of Europe was wiped out by the disease. Interestingly, bubonic plague also played a role in economic change, as the labor shortage caused by the disease meant that workers could ask for higher pay.

Although outbreaks of the disease are uncommon today, the recent cases of bubonic plague in China have raised concerns that the world could see a return of the Black Death.

38. What is the passage mainly about?
(A) The economic and social changes in Europe from the 14th to the 17th century.
(B) The development of modern medicine and its role in fighting diseases.
(C) The history, spread, and impact of bubonic plague.
(D) The role of fleas and other insects in spreading diseases.
39. What does “reared its ugly head” mean in the first paragraph?
(A) Had an unwanted return.
(B) Lost an important part.
(C) Disagreed with others.
(D) Made a big difference.
40. Which of the following statements is true, according to the passage?
(A) During the 14th century, the bubonic plague caused a severe labor shortage, leading to lower wages across Europe.
(B) From the 14th to the 17th century, the bubonic plague only affected Europe and did not spread to other continents.
(C) The disease spreads mainly through contaminated food and water, making it easy to transmit in crowded cities.
(D) One common symptom of bubonic plague is the appearance of painful, swollen lumps called "buboes."

(B)

Have you ever felt confused when you say “food,” but pronounce “oo” differently with that in “blood”? Why does “rough” rhyme with “stuff”? The ultimate question would probably be: why is English seemingly so irregular when there’s usually a fixed relation between spelling and sound in other languages? The answer to that question is that language evolves, just as any other living animals in the world. Languages change gradually.

Believe it or not, back in the 13th century, English was pretty much pronounced the way it was written, which sounded more like German or Dutch, since English is technically a Germanic language. However, between the 14th to 17th centuries, the vowel sounds of English underwent a shift known as the Great Vowel Shift, marking the transition from Middle to Modern English. It had a huge impact on how English is pronounced today. For instance, “make” had a monophthong (single vowel) /a/ sound before the Great Vowel Shift. The vowel then became a diphthong (double vowels) /eɪ/ as we say it now.

If you already accept the fact that pronunciations of a language diversify over time, you may start to question: why don’t we change the way we write accordingly? One possible explanation for not being able to do so was the invention of the printing press. It made mass production of written materials easy in the 15th century, when the vowels were shifting differently even for the same letter(s) during the long period of the Great Vowel Shift. Therefore, when the vowels finished shifting, there were already lots of printed products in wide distribution. You may further wonder why the Great Vowel Shift happened. Enroll in the course “History of the English Language” and explore more in no time!

41. Why does the first paragraph mention the words "food," "blood," and "rough"?
 - (A) To highlight how English spelling has remained unchanged over time.
 - (B) To show that English pronunciation and spelling do not always match.
 - (C) To demonstrate that the Great Vowel Shift standardized English pronunciation.
 - (D) To explain that English words were originally borrowed from Dutch and German.
42. What does “It” in the second paragraph refer to?
 - (A) Middle English.
 - (B) Modern English.
 - (C) Great Vowel Shift.
 - (D) A Germanic language.
43. According to the passage, which of the following statements is TRUE?
 - (A) The Great Vowel Shift caused English to sound more like Latin.

(B) The invention of the printing press made it easier to adjust English spelling to match pronunciation changes.

(C) Before the Great Vowel Shift, English words were pronounced more similarly to how they were written.

(D) The word “make” is used as an example to explain the movement from a diphthong to a monophthong.
